The Legislative Drafting Research Fund has for some time planned the preparation of an index digest of state constitutions to meet the need, which it constantly experiences in its own work, of readily accessible information as to the exact provisions of the fundamental law of the states. Prior to undertaking the preparation of this index digest for the New York Constitutional Convention of 1915 the Fund had begun the work of collecting and bringing down to date the text of the various state constitutions, but the actual digesting and classification of their provisions had not been begun and it was expected that the satisfactory completion of the work would require much more time than was available if the material was to be ready for the use of the Convention. We were persuaded, however, to undertake the task by the anticipation of a pressing demand in the Convention for information as to the content of other state constitutions, and by the hope that the use of such a digest by the Convention would develop valuable criticisms and suggestions for its future perfection.

The preparation of this volume was not begun until December, 1914. The mass of the material to be digested and the necessity of originating a classification, as well as the painstaking and time-consuming work of comparing citations and proof-reading, made it necessary that the digesting and editing of provisions relating to some important subjects be done by persons not members of our permanent staff. As a result there was not opportunity for that constant consultation among all the members of the editorial staff which is so essential to the production of an accurate and well-balanced work of this kind. No effort has been spared to make the digest paragraphs and citations accurate. The classification and arrangement of the material present the chief opportunity for improvement of the index digest in its present form. It is our hope that its publication in this form will provoke discussion among a number of persons interested in the solution of the problems with which we have struggled. It is our intention to prepare and publish at some later date a revised edition, which we hope may be made more useful to public officials and students of political science by reason of such discussion. For this reason it is earnestly hoped that readers noting omissions or mistakes will report them, together with general or specific criticisms of the plan and scope of the work. Especially desired are suggestions as to points of view from which to classify the material, and as to new titles or subheads.

The volume has been prepared with the idea of giving under each title and subhead enough of the constitutional provisions to render unnecessary reference to the text of the constitution unless, for such purposes as the drafting of new provisions, the exact phraseology is wanted. Every effort has been made to make the entries conform as nearly as possible to the language used and to avoid construing the constitutions. As a consequence of this procedure, many provisions, substantially similar, have been separately entered, because the method of expression is different.

In using the index digest it should be remembered that it is intended to be a comparative statement of the provisions of all the constitutions arranged by subject, rather than an attempt to present a picture of each constitution. The volume, therefore, should be more useful to a person desiring information as to how any phase of a subject is treated in the various states, than to a person seeking to find how a particular state treats that subject; e. g., under the title "Public Officers," subhead "Qualifications and Disqualifications," the reader desiring to find the provisions on this subject in any one state would have to turn over many pages, but if he wishes to know what provisions there are as to any particular branch of the subject, as for example, the effect of conviction for bribery, he will find them brought together in one place.

It should also be remembered that, in order to prevent constant repetition, provisions relating to a class of subjects have not been repeated under all the particular subjects which constitute the class, e. g., a provision relating to public officers generally is digested only under that title and not repeated under the titles of particular officers. Conversely, provisions relating to a particular subject forming part of a general class are not repeated under the general class, e. g., provisions relating specifically to the governor are not repeated under the title "Public Officers." It results that the reader must carefully follow all the cross references given.

The material digested includes all amendments adopted up to January 1, 1914, so far as we have been able to obtain them. Requests were sent to the various secretaries of state for a copy of each constitution in its most recent form, together with information as to amendments adopted since its publication. The material collected was checked up in every way possible in the time available, and it is believed that the texts on which the index digest is based are substantially complete. The citations in all cases are to the article and section of the constitution as it now stands, as amended, and no information is given as to the date when adopted, with the exception that the figures "1914" have been added to the citation in many cases where the amendment was adopted in that year.

POWER OF MUNICIPALITY TO FRAME ITS CHARTER

Under this subhead are digested provisions relating to powers of counties, cities, towns, villages and municipalities to frame their own charters. Where a section relates to counties or to a specified city it is so indicated in the citation.

For provision relating to recall by voters of judicial decision holding any provision of charter unconstitutional, See COURTS — DECISIONS.

Power Granted to

Any municipality. (Ohio XVIII 7.)

Voters of every city and town. (Ore. XI 2.)

Electors of each city and village. (Mich. VIII 21.)

Any city or village. (As only right granted is that of framing charter for its own government "as a city", it would seem to apply only to cities and prospective cities, and not to villages.) (Minn. IV 36.)

People of city and county of Denver, and of each city and town with population of 2,000 as determined by last preceding census taken under its own authority or that of United States or state. (Colo. XX 4, 6.)

After filing charter framed under provisions of this article city or town may provide and legislate for creation of municipal offices, agencies, employments and police and municipal courts and for the powers, duties and jurisdiction thereof and the election, appointment, terms, qualifications, etc., of the officers thereof; all matters pertaining to municipal elections; municipal debt; park and water districts; municipal taxation; and fines and penalties for violation of provisions of charter or ordinances. Intention of article is to grant to people of all municipalities "full right of self-government in both local and municipal matters", and enumeration of certain powers herein not to be construed to deny any right or power essential to full exercise of such right. (Colo. XX 4, 6.)
